

RESEARCH MEMO SAMPLE

Placeholder PDF sample for a recent-grad portfolio

Working Title

What Makes Students Actually Engage With Campus Events

Opening

This sample stands in for a capstone summary, research memo, or analytical writing piece. It is designed to show synthesis: taking notes, survey results, or interviews and turning them into a clear argument.

Question

Many student groups struggle with turnout even when they post consistently. The better question is not whether communication happened. It is whether the message felt relevant, specific, and easy to act on.

Findings

Students were more likely to respond when invitations answered three questions quickly:

1. What is happening?
2. Why is it worth my time?
3. What do I need to do next?

Implication

The communication itself did not need to be longer. It needed to remove uncertainty. Clearer naming, stronger timing, and better visual consistency all made participation feel more accessible.

What This Sample Shows

Research framing

Argument structure

Selective use of evidence

Analytical writing that stays readable

Closing

A good memo does not only report information. It makes the next decision easier.

Replace this placeholder with a real capstone abstract, memo, or research-based writing sample.